Alex always loved markets. He remembers leafing through the Columbus Dispatch Business Section in elementary school looking at stock tables. The concept of returns on capital when, to that point in his life, all his returns had been on labor, was fascinating to him. He never really looked back. Alex received a BA in Finance from Cedarville University and was awarded a M.A. in Financial Economics from Ohio University. He worked for Edward Jones out of college, moved to Huntington Bank for several years, and most recently spent four years at the Ohio Schools Employee Retirement System where he managed OHSERS' global equity portfolio. He lives in Johnstown with his wife, Cynthia, and sons Thomas and Dallas. He enjoys spending time with family, being outdoors, and reading history and theology.
